Oil prices soar after removal of oil minister

NEW YORK (AP)—The removal of Sheik Ahmed Zaki Yamani as Saudi Arabia's oil minister sent prices of crude oil and refined products soaring Thursday.

Analysts attributed the reaction to a combination of technical factors and uncertainty over the effect his departure would have on future efforts by the Organization of Petrolueum Exporting Countries to limit production to boost world prices.

Prices also were boosted by reports that Yamani's replacement, Hisham Nazer, had called for an emergency meeting of OPEC'S pricing committee, indicating the possibility of a renewal of determination by the cartel to boost prices.

Some analysts speculated Yamani's departure would remove a long-respected voice of moderation within the fractious cartel, making future agreements to limit production and higher oil prices less likely.

But others said that King Fahd's move had smoothed the way to better cooperation within the 13-nation cartel and that this would boost chances for higher prices in the future.

At the New York Mercantile Exchange, contracts for December delivery of West Texas Intermediate, the benchmark U.S. grade of crude oil, jumped $1.31 a barrel to close at $15.04.

Prices for November delivery of refined products also rose significantly. Heating oil closed at 39.57 cents a gallon, up 2.8 cents, while unleaded gasoline rose to 40 cents a gallon, up 2.15 cents.

Several analysts attributed the buying mainly to "short-covering." In a short sale, a trader sells borrowed oil in the hopes that the price will fall before the oil has to be replaced, thus profiting on the drop in price. "Short-covering" is buying oil needed to fulfill that obligation.

Last week OPEC agreed on a production limitation agreement after 17 days of Four from Chicago street gang alleged in Libyan conspiracy

CHICAGO (AP)—Four members of the El Rukn street gang were indicted Thursday on federal weapons charges for allegedly offering to carry out terrorist attacks in the United States in exchange for money from Libya.

Charged in the conspiracy are El Rukn leader Jeff Fort, imprisoned in a federal penitentiary in Texas on a drug conviction; Melvin Mayes; Alan Knox; and Trammel Davis, all of Chicago.

Knox and Davis were arrested Aug. 5 following a raid on the gang's South Side headquarters that yielded more than 30 weapons, including an inoperative M-72 series light anti-tank rocket that had been sold to the gang by an undercover FBI agent.

Knox, 35, and Davis, 34, are being held without bail on federal weapons charges stemming from that raid. Mayes, 29, is being sought by authorities.

Charles Lee Knox, 42, was arrested outside his Chicago home later Thursday on a federal warrant issued earlier in the day in San Antonio, Texas, said FBI spokesman Bob Long. Knox was sought for making false statements to the government in the case, said U.S. Attorney Anton Valukas.

Long stressed that gang members sought out representatives of the Libyan government, and not vice versa.

"It appears the El Rukns were interested in building a war chest. They offered to do whatever the bidding of Libya might be, though nothing actually came of the plot," he said.

Valukas declined comment on whether the Libyan officials agreed to the El Rukn proposal.

A receptionist at Libya's mission at the United Nations who declined to identify herself said Ambassador Ali Treiki was out of the mission and would not be available Thursday for comment.

The El Rukns offered to use the weapons and explosives they had been gathering since

Nutmeg editor seeks better pay for staff

By Kristina Martell
Daily Campus Staff

The editor of the 1987 Nutmeg yearbook said she is not pleased with the yearbook's tentative budget that Publisher Steve Protter presented at Thursday night's meeting of the Undergraduate Student Government.

Editor Sue Neufeld said she does not believe her staff would be satisfield with the amount of pay they would receive from the $34,000 budget Protter proposed at USG's Public Relations Committee meeting.

According to the budget, which has yet to be formally submitted, Neufeld would get $1,500 for completing the yearbook and her staff would get $500.

"My staff deserves more," she said. "They are dedicated and reliable. I couldn't have gotten a better staff."

Neufeld also said she plans on researching how yearbook staffs at other schools are paid, to provide a guideline for evaluating Nutmeg's proposed budget.

Neufeld said Yearbook Adviser Barry Wilson and Protter compiled a budget and discussed it with her yesterday. She said the proposed budget is "very tentative."

"It's not my place to say it's [yearbook budget] wrong," she said. "I want to see the staff get more. If I get my way, they'll get half of what I get."

Neufeld said a budget cannot be confirmed until a printing company is hired. Protter said he anticipates printing costs to be $27,000. He said printing costs are expected in on November 3.

But Neufeld said she believes these costs would be about $20,000. If this is so, Neufeld said she hopes to distribute the extra money to her staff's salary. She said that Wilson has

USG proposes internship program

By Bill Slocum
Daily Campus Staff

Corporations, special interest groups, and farmers all have lobbyists in the Connecticut legislature, and, if Undergraduate Student Government representative Gail Bysiewicz has her way, so will UConn's student body.

Bysiewicz is leading a USG drive to create lobbying internships for UConnstudents, which would give the USG representation in the state capitol at Hartford. Bysiewicz said she hopes to provide college credits for the student intern, along with what a USG press release calls "an important educational experience in a non-traditional setting".

Her proposal, as it presently stands, would provide two or three students with a full-time and semester-long internship like a Co-op program, which would give each student 15 credits upon completion. Uner the USG plan, the intern will be chosen by the USG External Affairs Committee, which Bysiewicz chairs, and be under their jurisdiction. They will be graded by UConn's political science department.

According to the present USG program, intern requirements include "monitor[ing] hearings and committee meetings at the Capital as assigned by External Affairs Chairperson",

Dodd, Eddy race enters closing days

HARTFORD (AP)—Republican Senate candidate Roger W. Eddy said Thursday that Congress should declare English the official language of the United States and limit bilingual education programs in schools.

Eddy and U.S. Sen. Christopher J. Dodd, D-Conn., both held news conferences as the campaign for the Senate entered its closing days.

Eddy was upbeat despite polls that show Dodd a heavy favorite in Tuesday's election and said there was still a chance he could pull off a major political upset.

Dodd also was upbeat as he discussed the campaign informally with a group of reporters in Waterbury, following a formal news conference on a new statewide effort to combat drug and alcohol abuse.

But Dodd said, "I'm never confident of victory."

Dodd said he is running a vigorous campaign because overconfidence and lazy campaigning have led to the defeat of other senators with early leads as commanding as his.

Eddy, who acknowledged he began his campaign as a clear underdog, said, "Things are looking up for me. I think maybe there is a historic upset in the making here."

Eddy, the state's Republican national committeeman, said his campaign was hampered by unfulfilled promises from the national party. Eddy said he received $100,000 from the Republican Senatorial Campaign Committee, instead of the $230,000 he was promised.

President Reagan, he said, has not come to Connecticut to campaign for him because political polls never showed him seriously closing the gap with Dodd.

Pharmacist convicted of manslaughter

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP)—A pharmacist who said he felt no remorse at firing six bullets into the man he believed fatally abused his grandson was convicted Thursday of voluntary manslaughter.

Charles Jones, 49, of Nashville, who had been charged with second-degree murder, faces a prison sentence of 2-6 years.

The Criminal Court jury began deliberating Wednesday after hearing Jones respond to questions about why he had not allowed the courts to mete out justice in the death of 2-year-old Ryan Reed.

"When your grandbaby is mutilated, you don't think about all these high thoughts that you're putting forth here," said Jones.

District Attorney General Tom Shriver reminded Jones that he had earlier said he was not sorry about the shooting death of Bobby Gann Jr.

"I'd say the same thing again," Jones said, adding that he felt "at peace" after the shooting.

"Are you going to decide that this city, this country, will tolerate an eye for an eye, a tooth for a tooth, a death for a death, without a trial?" Shriver asked the jury during closing arguments.

"As long as it wasn't murder, thank God for that," said defense attorney Joe Binkley Sr. "I was just absolutely scared to death all night and all morning that they might come back with second-degree."

He said Jones could receive probation on the lesser charge. Judge Randall Wyatt scheduled a sentencing hearing for Dec. 15.

Jones took the stand Wednesday to describe his thoughts before his daughter's 23-year-old fiance was shot to death Jan. 9 as he slept in a waiting room at Vanderbilt University Medical Center, where young Ryan lay in a coma.

Austrian president denies allegations

VIENNA, Austria (AP)—President Kurt Waldheim on Thursday said he did not fight Yugoslav partisans during a Nazi operation and denied he was approached after the war to work for Soviet intelligence, according to his spokesman.

Gerold Christian, the spokesman, made the comments after new allegations appeared in the U.S. media about Waldheim's activity in World War II.

The Washington Post reported Thursday that Waldheim acknowledged after months of denial that he had played a role in the brutal Nazi "pacification" operation that cost thousand of lives in Yugoslavia.

It said that in a 13-page memo sent to the Post in April, the former U.N. secretary-general had denied he was involved in the 1942 operation to remove all 80,000 resident, including 3,500 armed partisans, from Kozara, a mountainous region in Yugoslavia.

The newspaper Thursday quoted Christian as saying "additional research" revealed the president's earlier statement was incorrect.

But in a telephone conversation with The Associated Press on Thursday, Christian said the earlier statements by Waldheim that he was not involved in the Kozara operation "were not incorrect."

"The war record was, however, supplemented after files and documents were found" and the information was made available to U.S. authorities in August, Christian said.

Christian, who said Waldheim was in the Kozara area for a short period, quoted the president as saying he was not directly involved in fighting and did not witness mass killings.

"Waldheim never took part in any way in actions against partisans or Jews," Christian said. The spokesman said Waldheim "never got into physical contact with partisans."

Funding Program offered for master's degree students

Federal funding for people interested in teaching students with limited English proficiency is available through The University of Connecticut School of Education.

The program is offered to full and part-time students pursuing a master's degree in education with emphasis in bilingual and bicultural education (Spanish-English). Students enroled in the program may receive scholarships of tuition, fees, expenses, book allowances and stipends, depending on their course loads. The program is offered to people already teaching or those planning to become teachers.

The program is funded through the Title VII Educational Personnel Training Program funded by the U.S. Department of Education, Office of Bilingual Education and Minority Languages Affairs.

The deadline for funding applications, including the letter of admission from the UConn Graduate School, is Friday, Nov. 7.

For more information, contact Dr. Liliana Minaya-Rowe, U-32, School of Education, Department of Educational Studies and Instructional Media, 486-5103.

Documents concerning August jetlinercollision released

WASHINGTON (AP)—The pilot of an Aeromexico jetliner apparently had no warning and no time to avoid a collision with a private Piper A-28 plane August 31 over Cerritos, Calif., according to documents released today by the National Transportation Safety Board.

Co-pilot Hector Valencia, who was at the controls of Flight 498 at 6,568 feet, and Capt. Arturo Valdes Prom, who was handling the radio aboard the DC-9, had just completed a routine exchange with air traffic control when tragedy struck during an approach into Los Angeles.

"Oh (expletive deleted) this can't be!" Valdes, 46, said in Spanish. Investigators are uncertain whether he was talking about the impact or possible loss of the controls, but they are convinced that the two aircrafts had collided by then. Eighty-two people died when the jetliner crashed into a residential neighborhood.

The transcript of the cockpit conversation was made public Thursday by the NTSB. Large segments of the tape were inaudible, however, because of poor quality and background noise.

There was virtually no conversation between Valdes and Valencia, the 26-year-old co-pilot at the controls, that could be heard clearly on the tape, officials said.

Partly because of the tape's poor quality, sources close to the investigation also indicated that there was no way to discern how actively the pilots were searching the skies for other traffic in the crowded air space near Los Angeles International Airport.

Less than two minutes before the collision, the Los Angeles tower controller advised Flight 498 of another plane at "10:00, one mile northbound, altitude

Candidates debate over this year's election laws

By Keith Phaneuf
Campus Correspondent

KILLINGLY—Democratic incumbent Julia Tashjian, 48, of Windsor, and Republican challenger Pauline Keezer, 44, of Plainville, squared off at the Quinebaug Valley Community College last night in Danielson to debate about election laws that will appear on this year's ballot. Both are candidates for the position of secretary of state.

Keezer, a four-term state representative, argued in favor of opening political primaries to unaffiliated voters. "It makes for stronger candidates," she said. "The people that don't want this are those who are in power and have pulled party strings for years and years."

"You're deluding the party enrollment process when you allow unaffiliated voters to take part," Tashjian said. "You're giving an unenrolled voter as much say as a party member. We might as well be unaffiliated."

Tashjian gave her support for the continued portion of the party lever in voting groups. "People are not stupid, " she said. "People know when they go in if they want to split the ticket. Let's not insult the intelligence of the electorate of Connecticut."

Keezer said she will continue to campaign against the party lever. She said removing the lever willl encourage voters to become more informed about the candidates. "It's been much simpler for years to just go in and pull one lever and have no idea who you have voted for. I think you have the responsibility to at least look at the names of the person you vote for," Keezer said.

Keezer also argued that direct primaries should be used to choose candidates as opposed to the established state party convention.

"Holding direct primaries over conventions will not only allow for more voter participation, but will increase the need to become educated about the candidiates, " Keezer said.

Tashjian countered, saying that direct primaries are not needed at all to create voter turnout. "Connecticut does not have direct primaries, yet our voter turnout every year is way above the national average," she said. "Our voters seem to be happy with the system we have. "

Tashjian defended her office in regard to last May's democratic gubernatorial delegate primary in Waterbury, and the related charges of absentee ballot fraud. "Once in a while you get people who break the law. We do have a law in place and it has penalties," Tashjian said.

She told Keezer that elections laws can be changed by individauls outside the secretary of state's office. "If you thought something was wrong with the election laws, it was your duty as a legislature to fix that. I don't think you've introduced one thing dealing with election laws," Tashjian said

Keeezer told Tashjian that the Waterbury incident was not an example of a new problem. "If you had been on your toes, you could have done sonething to prevent its happening. Those things are not exactly new. This incident affected the whole state," Keezer said.

unknown." But the tapes indicated nothing to show whether the crew sighted the aircraft or was even looking. Investigators have determined the third plane flew away from the area safely.

According to the documents released by the NTSB on the collision, the final 11 minutes of the flight seemed uneventful as the twin-engine jet with 64 people aboard made its way north to Los Angeles.

As late as 11:51:30 a.m. all appeared well aboard the jetliner, according to the ttranscript.

"Thank you," the captain remarked, but the context could not be established because of the poor quality of the recording.

A few seconds later, the Los Angeles air traffic controller told the aircraft to maintain its speed. Ten seconds later, the transcript showed the first and only indication that the jetliner was in trouble.

"Oh (expletive deleted), this can't be" the DC-9 captain said. It was the last entry on the transcript and interpreted by investigators to be the point where the Piper A-28 slammed into the tail section of the jetliner.

The collision tore loose the critical part of the tail theat gives the jet its balance and stability. Photographs taken by witnesses on the ground have shown the DC-9 turning upside down and plummeting nose first toward the ground.

Neufeld and Protter said they are carefully scrutinizing the actions of the staff to ensure that the completed work is confirmed by the printing company before anyone is paid. "We have to be careful with paying the staff," Neufeld said. "But I do want my staff to get what they deserve."

To my little pumpkin on Halloween
I'll show you things you've never seen!
With a costume adorned with little frills
It'll be a night of unexpected thrills!
For on this night of Hallo's eve
you will, my love, from me receive
Hugs and Kisses and goodies, too, that shall last the whole night through!
So at the SNUGGLE PATCH
We'll meet
To have a little trick of treat!
Love you little devill! XOXOX

Maureen (my big sister). Happy Halloween!! You're the greatest!! Thanks for everything I couldn't ask for a better Big Sister!! Looking forward to this weekend!

Michele, on this day of masks and quizes,
full of spooks and weird surprizes,
I find the need to open my heart,
And ask that we will never part.
I pray you'd say you'll be my goblin,
until that day I'm old and hobblin,
I'll promise to be your ghoulish fiend,
if you'll say yes this Halloween.
So take my hand and look at me,
And happy ghosts we'll always be
Love Alwayss, Ken

haggling in Geneva. The accord sets quotas for the cartel's 13 members until Dec. 31.

During that session, oil prices had generally hovered in a range between $15 and $16 a barrel. But recently they fell below $14 a barrel, partly because traders' confidence in OPEC'S ability to stick to its own quotas had been shaken by the difficulty it had in reaching the agreement.

In Paris Thursday, Saudi Arabia's interior minister, Prince Naif ibn Abdul Aziz, said the decision to remove Yamani did not mean the kingdom was changing its oil policy.

But Western observers said it was apparent that King Fahd's decision to replace Yamani with Hisham Nazer, the planning minister and a close associate, signaled some dissatisfaction with Yamani's role as the chief exector of Saudi oil policy and its point man in OPEC negotiations.

Several market analysts said traders found the king's move worrisome.

Yamani had served as the Saudi oil minister since 1962, two years after the founding of OPEC, and had been the longest-serving minister in the cartel.

March—including several purchased from undercover FBI agents—to damage federal properties and vehicles, Valukas said.

He declined to be more specific.

Long said authorities gathered much of the information that resulted in Thursday's indictments during undercover sales to El Rukn members and during the August raid on the gang's headquarters.

About two dozen Chicago Police Department officers and 50 federal agents, including some from the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms, participated in that raid.

Authorities say the El Rukns are a predominantly black gang of several hundred members who espouse a form of Islam. Earlier this year, a federal judge denied the group's request to be recognized as an organized religion so that members could preach, organize and gather for services while in prison.

Authorities say the El Rukns began as the Blackstone Rangers street gang and later became the Black P Stone Nation.

Renovations begin for User Services

By Benjamin Bulkley
Campus Correspondence

The Office of Facilities has begun renovations of the UConn Computer Center User Services office in the Math-Science Building according to the manager of User Services, Jack Babbitt.

Babbitt said that renovations are needed to give his full-time and student staff, which has doubled since last semester, more room. He added that the total square footage of the office will not increase, but the new layout should provide much more usable space.

Babbitt said the "extremely tight" conditions distracted the consulting staff. He said the walls are being torn down and replaced with modular furnishings. This will help to limit the flow of heavy traffic through the office, he said, and give his staff a quieter area in which to concentrate.

Babbitt said that his full-time staff will be moved to a temporary location as the construction progresses. He said renovations are expected to be completed by Christmas.

The walk-in consulting area has been relocated to room 48A and will remain there permanently. Babbitt said, the inconveniences, primarily finding documentation, will end this week.

...lobbying internship

"Attend[ing] bi-weekly External Affairs Committee meetings and report[ing] on current lobbying efforts", and "a ten-page paper, to be graded by the Academic Advisor, about the experience gained from the program".

Bysiewicz called the program "a great opportunity both for students and administrators". She said the first thrust of USG lobbyists would be to follow up on the work of the "Bigger Better Deal" and concentrate on financial aid. "I hope this will be an effective lobbying force. We'll have to make sure that the lobbyists are well-

The USG proposal will become official university policy if Larry Bowman, head of the political science department, approves the internship as part of the department's curriculum. Bysiewicz said she is planning to "negotiate the specifics" with Bowman sometime next week.

While she says she "is not certain whether or not we will be getting credits" from the department and that "everything is up in the air", Bysiewicz said she has gotten back positive responses from the administration. "I hope we get this [the credits], but if we don't we'll send the interns down on a volunteer basis."

The importance of the program to USG was stressed by Bysiewicz. "We're missing much at the [state)]legislature." She added that USG has "no steady hold" of what goes on in Hartford, and is "misinformed" about developments there.

She said last year's "Bigger Better Deal", a UConn student lobbying effort led by then USG representative Geoff Johnson, was "a great job" and an example to her of a successful way for USG to lobby. She said she "definitely wants students there [Hartford] for information and a source of communication as well as representatives". She pointed out issues in the Connecticut legislature, such as the drinking age, student financial aid, and UConn's budget, and also said her committee would be open to suggestions of other issues seen as important by the student body.

She also discussed cooperation with UConn administration's present lobbyists, led by Legislative Liason William Hagan. "While we will be working together with the administration on some issues, there will be others, such as the drinking age issue, which might be more us", Bysiewicz said. She said she hoped the intern progam would "support the lobbying efforts of the administration", and the "administration angle" and the "student angle" at the capital would support each other and benefit the campus. She added that Hagan provided her with much advice on her lobbying proposal and "supports the concept of the resolution". She said USG was hoping Hagan would advise the lobbyists in an official capacity, but she said that they were not sure whether he will.

Bysiewicz called the program "a great opportunity both for students and administrators". She said the first thrust of USG lobbyists would be to follow up on the work of the "Bigger Better Deal" and concentrate on financial aid. "I hope this will be an effective lobbying force. We'll have to make sure that the lobbyists are well-informed and look good out there."

USG passed Bysiewicz's proposal on October 5. Bysiewicz cited the help of John Rourke, a political science professor who helped form the present intern plan. Bysiewicz said she would like to be able to advertise the internships by November.

People: Sam and Diane to get hitched

NEW YORK (AP)-Sam Diane, the jock bartender and the intellectual waitress on the NBC comedy "Cheers," will get hitched in the last episode of the season, says series star Ted Danson.

"Everyone's doing romance with sexual tension-type banter now. It's time to move on," Danson was quoted as saying in USA Today on Thursday.

The newspaper said the story line will begin later in the season, with Danson's Sam proposing a second time to Diane, played by Shelley Long.

NBC entertainment publicist Virginia Holden said she had not heard of any wedding plans.

Miss Long has said she would like to move on, but Danson told USA Today, "It could go either way."

DENVER (AP)-Oscar-winnning composer Marvin Hamlisch has agreed to write the school song for Metropolitan State College of Denver, the college's president says.

"The kind of emotional responses I get from his songs are the same as I get from Metro State," President Paul Magnelli said. Hamlisch has written scores for such movies as "The Sting," "A Chorus Line," and "The Way We Were."

Magnelli said he contacted Hamlisch through Sidney Schenker, a mutual friend and owner of the National Basketball Association's Denver Nuggets.

PHILADELPHIA (AP)-A couple who lost their home in last year's fatal move siege are featured in an ad praising an insurance company.

The ads, seen in buses and subways in Pittsburgh and Philadelphia, show Earl and Pearl Watkins smiling and saying, "Thank God we had Hanover Mutual Fire Insurance!"

Two days after their home was one of 61 destroyed in the May 13, 1985, confrontation betwen police and the radical group MOVE, the Philadelphia-based insurance company handed the couple a compensation check, the Watkinses say.

"Many of the people on our street had no insurance whatsoever, and we were very fortunate because we had Hanover," Watkins said Thursday. "I thought it would be a wonderful way to tell people what happened to us."

He declined to say how much they were paid for the ad, but said it was more than $200 and that much of it would go to charity.

The city has rebuilt the homes destroyed in the seige, which ended in fire after police dropped a bomb on the fortified rowhouse occupied by MOVE members during an unsuccessful eviction attempt. Eleven occupants of the MOVE house died in the fire.

IRVING, Tex. (AP)-Seventh grader Jon Daly's job is simple, really: making sure Dallas Cowboy's coach Tom Landry doesn't get tangled up in his telephone cord.

The 13-year-old grandson of Cowboys offensive coach Jim Myers follows Landry around the sidelines on NFL Sundays at Texas Stadium, carrying the phone the head coach uses to talk to an assistant in the press box.

Daly, who used to be a Cowboy's water boy, said his job is to "make sure he doesn't trip over the cord or none of the players stand on it . . . I also test it before a game to make sure it works."

He said he once had a close call during the excitement after a Dallas touchdown as Landry and the players ran towards the end zone.

"Some of the players were standing on the cord, and it pulled him back and he almost tripped. It loosened just in time and he regained his balance before he fell on his face," Daly said.

"My grandad looked at me like 'What are you doing?' and there was nothing I could do."

TUSCON, Ariz. (AP)-The widow of space shuttle Challenger commander Dick Scobee presented his alma mater Thursday with a University of Arizona medallion and banner recovered from the wreckage.

Friends at the university, from which Scobee graduated in 1965 with a degree in aerospace engineering, had asked him to take the memorabilia from the univerisity's centennial in his flight kit, June Scobee said.

Univerisity officials said the items would be added to an exhibit on manned space flight at the Flandrau Planetarium.

Mrs. Scobee said the medallion was the only one recovered of hundreds taken on the shuttle, which exploded shortly after launch January 28, killing all seven crewmembers.

"All of the items that were lightweight, like flags, survived," she said. "Most people had heavy medallions and they weren't found."

TOKYO (AP)-Things that make people laugh have not changed much in 2,000 years, says French mime Marcel Marceau.

"I'm sure Romans laughed when someone slipped on a banana peal," Marceau, known for his white-faced, hapless character Bip, said in a luncheon speech Thursday.

On stage he is a man of no words, but Marceau showed off his love of language for the Foreign Correspondents Club of Japan, aping foreign languages without in fact saying anything.

TEL AVIV, Israel (AP)-Jack Lemmon said Wednesday he would keep on acting until he was "run over by a truck or a critic."

Lemmon is in Israel for a two-week run of Eugene O'Neill's "Long Day's Journey Into Night," which opened here after a stint in London. London critics gave him mixed reviews.

Her plays the role of James Tyrone, an ex-matinee idol gone to seed with a morphine-addicted wife and son dying of consumption.

Lemmon, smoking a cigar and joking with the cast and reporters attending the news conference, said playing Tyrone made him realize that "things like that could happen. His fate has enlightened me."

Director Jonathan Miller had found "the innate comedy of O'Neill" in the play, "and we weren't afraid to use it," Lemmon said.

"Everyone thinks that finding comic elements in O'Neill is sacrilege. I disagree. We all do."

He said the company would travel to Toronto next month to tape the three-hour play for cable television.

The most exciting few hours you'll spend all week.

Halloween is full of both mystery, mass media

By Pamela Close
Daily Campus Staff

Today is Halloween. It is the eve of Allhallows-- or Hallowmas or All Saints' Day. But no matter what you call it, tonight is the mysteriously bewitching night of ghosts, witches, black cats, practical jokes, trick-or-treaters, and, of course, celebrations.

The American celebration of Halloween has its origins in Scottish and Irish folk customs which date back to pre-Christian times, according to Ralph and Adelin Linton, authors of "Halloween: Through Twenty Centuries." Although Halloween has become a night of festive fun, superstitious spells and errie games, which are not taken seriously by most people, its beginnings were very different.

The earliest Halloween celebrations were held by a Celtic group in France in the second century B.C. They were in honor of Samhain, the Lord of the Dead, whose festival was on Nov. 1.

Nov. 1 was also the Celtic New Year. It marked the beginning of winter, the loss of daylight, the end of the agricultural season, the return of the herds from pasture and the triumph of the darkness on the land, according to the book, "The Black Arts" by Richard Cavendish. People celebrated the eve of Samhain with fire-festivals that were supposed to frighten away evil spirits.

Ghosts, witches, hobgoblins and demons soon became associated with Halloween because the souls of the dead were supposed to revisit their old homes on Oct. 31. "It was also a time to placate the supernatural powers controlling the processes of nature," according to the New Encyclopedia Britanica.

Halloween was also thought to be the best time for looking into the future in such areas as marriage, luck, health, and death. It was the only day on which the help of the devil was involved for such purposes, continues the Encyclopedia.

The Church became involved with Halloween when Pope Gregory III dedicated on oratory in St. Peter's to all saints and fixed the anniversary on Nov. 1, according to Cavendish. This was done because it was not possible to give every saint a special day of recognition and celebration on the Church's calender.

Because "the Church couldn't in its early days fight the pagan festivals," says Barbara Rosen, an English professor who has done some study in the area of witchcraft, Nov. 1 was chosen. People already associated the day with the spirits of the dead dating back from the ancient Celtic beliefs.

"They were celebrated on the same day," Rosen continues, because the Church wanted to incorporate the harmless pagan folk ideas into its traditions in hopes of future conversion.

As witchcraft, an organized cult which opposed the Church, grew in intensity, Halloween soon came to be known as "the great witch night. The Prince of Darkness and his cohorts, the witches and warlocks, gathered to mock the church's festival of All Saints by unholy revels of their own," according to the Lintons.

The witchs' commandment was to do as much harm as possible and never to reveal any of the their secrets. Many of the drugs that they used are now known "to produce vascular excitement and hallucinations," the Lintons continue. Their use by the witches can possibly explain why they claimed that they could ride on broomsticks.

The greatest witch persecutions took place in the 16th and 17th centuries. The Bible says "Thou shalt not suffer a witch to live" (Exodus 22:18). Taken out its context, this became a death sentence for many thousands. This was before science and the microscope changed the image of witches.

Black cats easily became associated with Halloween because the animals were often the frequent companions of strange, lonely old women who were likely to be regarded as witches. Even their appearance-- a stealthy grace, an evil glare and demonic whiskers, connected them to the holiday.

Also, because witches often employed their ability to turn themselves into cats, the black baleful felines were always suspiciously looked upon. In medieval times, it was reported that cats were roasted alive in wicker and thatch cages in the fires of Sanhain in hopes of killing a witch.

Jack-o-lanterns have also become associated with the festive traditions of Halloween. Before the native American pumpkins were used, rutabagas, turnips or potatoes were hollowed out, carved with frightening faces and lighted with candles to serve as lanterns at Halloween gatherings, according to the Lintons.

The history of the jack-o-lantern begins with the tale of a notorious Irishman named Jack. Constantly drunk and vicious, he was an evil man who even dared to trick the devil. When he died, neither heaven nor hell wanted him. He was compeled to wander forever through the darkness of the world. Using a coal from the furnace of hell, which he held inside of a turnip, he has lit his way ever since.

Halloween has special significance for Protestants. On Oct. 31, 1517, Martin Luther posted his epoch making ninety-five theses that attacked the purchasing of indulgences on the door of the Church of All Saints at Wittenberg, aceording to the Lintons.

He knew that many people would be coming to the church that night to pay homage to the saints. The people noticed and the practice of selling indulgences was abolished. The Reformation was underway.

Because the early settlers of the New World were predominantly English or Protestant, the celebration of Halloween came rather late to the New World. With the arrival of the Gaelic people on our shores, the Catholic observance of Allhallows and All Souls Day and the folklore became part of the American culture. The bountiful American pumpkins, apples, and nuts were also incorporated into the holiday.

Halloween became a nationally observed holiday after the great Irish immigration to the States following the potato famine in the 1840s. The Irish believed that the fairies and elves were constantly hovering about the mortals' homes. Since they were especially active on Halloween, any mischief that occured on that night could be blamed on them. This set the backround for vandalism and practical jokes on Halloween.

In later years, the favorite Halloween practice is to go trick-or-treating. Groups of small children, dressed up in costumes and masks, go from door to door in their neighborhood demanding "trick or treat." The trick is rarely played while the treat given is usually candy or homemade goodies.

Since 1965, UNICEF, an agency of the United Nations, has tried to incorporate in the Halloween observance the collection of money for the United Nation's Children Fund, according to the New Encyclopedia Brittancia.

In the 1980s, Halloween is "not as much a link to pagan festivites" as it is to advertising by the mass media, Rosen says. The holiday "is a product of hype and merchandising."

Nowadays, some sociologists refer to Halloween as a degenerate holiday. Although there are those who faithfully attend mass that day, it is predominately a time devoted to the delight and amusement of children.

However, the shreds of the old pagan superstitions still cling to us all. For instance, tonight, on Halloween, while going from a party in the Jungle to one up in Towers, would you dare take a shortcut and walk alone through the graveyard?

Student's death is a hoax

MILWAUKEE (AP)-Officials at a high school mistakenly announced over the public address system that one of the most popular students had overdosed on drugs and died.

After classes were out for the day, officials at Washington High learned that the girl was alive and well, but it was four days before they could tell the student body, The Milwaukee Journal reported.

Officials said they were investigating what they called an elaborate hoax.

The girl, whose name was not released, reportedly skipped school last Thursday to look for a job. She did not return home until more than an hour after school had closed for the day, the Journal said.

A call reporting the girl's death came that morning from what school officials called a legitimate source, the newspaper said. It was not made public until rumors began spreading through the school.

"We took it very seriously," said an administrator who would not let his name be used. However, police said the call to the school was anonymous.

A short time after the first announcement, school officials announced that the probable cause of death was a drug overdose, the Journal said.

That afternoon, Principal Jerome Brandl, who had been away from school during the morning, told students that he had been unable to verify facts surrounding the girl's death.

It was 5 p.m. before officials learned that the girl had not died, and by that time classes had been dismissed until Monday because parent-teacher conferences were scheduled for Friday.

By Monday, Brandl had written a letter explaining what had happened and asked teachers to read it to all of their students.

Caring, understanding are in Herbst's favor

If there is one person you would trust to make your decisons and keep things running smoothly in your life, it would probably be your mother. Unfortunately (or perhaps fortunately for some), your mother isn't around to take care of your needs at UConn.

But if it is governmental concerns which worry you because there just aren't the right people Hartford, fret no more. The 35th district state senate race offers a fresh new face who is willing to fight for all her constituents, including UConn.

Democrat Marie Herbst is no stranger to local politics. She has served as mayor of Vernon since 1979 and has been involved in town politics since 1967. A mother of five, she is aware of the needs of students and has pledged to fight for stronger financial support of college students.

Especially encouraging is Herbst's understanding of the plight of middle class families seeking financial aid. She realizes there is a problem with families which make too much money "on paper," but in reality are struggling to make ends meet.

Marie Herbst

"We have to take a look at those families," she said, and she is right. Something has to be done soon.

Herbst's campaign has chiefly centered around the "dignity of person" and equal rights for everyone. As a mother and advocate for the needy, she is understanding of how harsh life can be for the less-fortunate, such as single mothers, the poor and the elderly. Herbst offers students and residents alike a chance to have a hard working, concerned and potentially effective legislator representing them in the state senate. It would be a nice change for the stuffy Republican-controlled senate which has crippled the state for four years.

Herbst said she believes the United States has a role in assuring that human rights are maintained for everyone. Connecticut must do it's part in supporting programs which promote the human rights of its citizens, both young and old, healthy or sick, rich or poor. Herbst is the type of leader who would not allow these rights to be compromised no matter how large the price.

Connecticut needs more leaders who will stand up for what they believe. That is why The Daily Campus endorses Marie Herbst for election as state senator of the 35th district.

The irony of fate's grasp

I've really taken advantage of the Indian Summer weather of late by hiking around this northeastern Connecticut countryside and exploring all the trails that wind throughout the neighboring forests. Like the blue dot trail adjacent to the Fenton River, right off campus, that veers down into Gurleyville. Or the old farming roads that run parallel to the Willimantic River and Rt. 32.

And out on Rt. 44 heading east there are three reserves of state-owned property laced with ~~hiking~~ trails. Natchaug State Forest contains lots of beaver lodges. Mashamoquet Brook State Park passes historic Indian landmarks and was, in fact, named by the Indians; "land of much water." The hike to Wolf Den State Park, where Israel Putnam shot the very last wolf in Connecticut, runs hill to valley and passes through a variety of natural woodland habitats.

I'm really familiar with all these trails from years of living in northeast Connecticut. But this week, in my constant lifelong effort to strive for things "new", I decided to spend an afternoon trying out a series of small mountains out in Willington behind Moosemeadow Road whose trails were made by the area's first settlers. The Doberman was enthusiastic to explore new terrain. He hiked beside me on his leash until we were well away from any sight of houses, then I let him run free.

We had two good hours of daylight before the early sunset. The last trees to change color were magnificent in depth of golden hues, and the quiet was interrupted only by our crunching the floor of fallen leaves. Suddenly a rabbit rustled in a nearby stretch of woods. Forgetting our lengthy discussions about obedience, Rocky took off in a flurry and vanished into the brush. The curving flow of the mountain swallowed him up.

Did you ever have such a situation happen which made you wonder how much input you truly have in your life? This experience gave me time to step back and think about how easily we are caught up in fate's grasp. I had not been negligent in my dog-watching responsibilities, yet although I called and called his name, Rocky didn't return.

No matter how positive we are in life, no matter the amount of hard work and effort we focus toward good ends, life seems to throw us the unexpected. All I could think as I rehiked the same paths was how ironic life truly is. Instead of enjoying an afternoon with the Soaps, I was breathing in the fresh outdoor air. Instead of lazily taking the dog once around the block, I trudged with him through thorn bushes and goldenrod. And to what avail?

The dust was settling in around me, and my concern was beginning to surround my own as well as Rocky's well-being. I summarized my situation on that dark mountain and decided to volunteer the aid of my roommate for a nighttime hike. When we returned, call as we might, Rocky still did not appear.

Well, the story has a relatively happy ending. Rocky did stay out all night, running to keep warm against the morning frost, visiting a lady Doberman he had discovered in the neighborhood. And I returned to the mountain trailhead at sunrise to find the dog there waiting complacently, having followed my sent back down the mountain, being quite agreeable to return to my warm car.

But I still can't help but to wonder what I would be feeling right now had he strayed indefinitely. I can recall the empty feeling in an instant. Since there's nothing I can do to remedy the matter, I've decided to be grateful that this time fate let me off easy this time. I will be more cautious, however, in unfamiliar territory. Maybe that was the lesson fate wanted to teach me.

Pelto receives NOW endorsement

The Political Action Committee of Ct. N.O.W. (National Organization for Women) endorses the candidacy of Jonathan Pelto for the 54th House District (Mansfield).

During his first term in the State Legislature Rep. Pelto has been an effective leader and has represented the interests of his district well. Mr. Pelto enthusiastically supports Ct. N.O.W.'s four priority issues: passage of the Equal Rights Amendment, keeping contraception and abortion safe and legal, prohibition of discrimination in jobs, housing, and accommodation on the basis of sexual orientation, and promoting minority rights.

Other issues important to women and families that are mutually supported by Mr. Pelto and Ct. N.O.W. are: enforcing the payment of child support, making typically women's jobs (nursing, clerical, child care) as well as paying as typically men's jobs that require similar amounts of education, increasing and improving job training for recipients of AFDC (Aid to Families with Dependent Children) , improving low and moderate income housing, aiding displaced homemakers entering the work force later in life, increasing state and private day care facilities, fair insurance for individuals and municipalities, and improving voter registration procedures

The disillusionment of a job search

It was the third week of my senior year at the University of Connecticut when I realized it was time to start thinking about getting a job. I wasn't very anxious about getting a job, until I realized exactly what that entailed. I began my job search by going to career services and meeting with a counselor. It was at this point my anticipation transformed into anxiety.

The counselor and I sat down and he began asking me questions about the resume I had given him. I was acting very professionally, pretending this was an interview; I sat up straight, didn't fidget, and kept good eye contact. I was concentrating on making a good impression so hard that I didn't hear half of what he said.

Then he asked the question I was afraid of. He asked me what I wanted to do when I graduated from school. I looked at him and with nervous laughter told him that I didn't know. After he asked me some more questions about things I might want to do, I was able to give him a choice of seven different professions. I felt very stupid and naive because I didn't have a definite answer at the time.

My friends who were accounting majors were going to be accountants. My friends who were nursing majors were going to be nurses. What was I going to be, I thought, a liberal artist? I shared my anxiety with him and he said it was very natural for a graduating senior to feel this way about his first job search. But as the appointment went on the anxiety intensified.

I was overwhelmed with questions such as how much money I wanted to make and where I wanted to live until I realized that he wasn't going to tell me anything I said was wrong. I began describing my dream job to him. "I want to work in Manhattan, for a small international company in the entertainment industry. I want to travel a great deal and would hope that they pay me $25,000 a year," I told him.

He didn't have the extreme reaction I thought he would have. He calmly told me that I was looking for a very competitive job in a very competitive city. That didn't scare me, but I realized he wasn't going to make any decisions for me. That is something I look for in people, and that scared me.

My mind swelled with thoughts of picking the wrong job, the wrong field, the wrong city. I envisioned myself being stuck as a manager for the "Flying Karamazov Brothers," and hating it. And then I realized all the possibilities I was closing off by writing a resume. What if I want to play the piano at a night club in New York? What if I want to be a writer and live on a small island in the Caribbean? All of the what if's I ever thought of suddenly stifled me. How can I possibly make a decision as important as what I want to do when I graduate while sitting in this stranger's office?

For the past four years I was a college student. The toughest decision I had to make was whether to have veal or chicken for dinner! Now I had to make a decision that could change the course of my life. Until then I only thought about working in New York and supporting myself. The idea of having to live with my own decisions was more frightening than living with my parents'. Who was I going to blame when things went wrong?

Next the counselor told me that for the type of job I was looking for I would have to rely on connections. He told me that I would have to get out and hit the streets to meet people and make contacts. It finally hit me that you don't go out and get a job; you have to work hard and search for one.

My first reaction was that I would have to write people, call people, meet with people, and interview with people, and it might not even be for the right job in the right field. I remember thinking that it wouldn't be so bad if someone had offered me a job and it wasn't right for me. But if I had to work so hard at finding this job and it didn't work out, I would be devastated.

At the end of the appointment I knew almost everything I would have to do to find a job. I left with an assignment to complete for our next appointment. I felt good about having done this so early in the year. I was even excited about going back the following week. But I still had no real vision of what I wanted to do or what I wanted to look for. All I had was a long list of possibilities and enough anxiety to make me want to skip my next appointment.

Shreds article was tasteless

I am appalled that The Daily Campus had the gall to print exerpts from the student publication "Shreds." Not only did I find them disgusting and offensive, but I do not feel any student needs to be subjected to blatant obscenity while they are reading the morning paper.

If some students at UConn wish to participate in such forms of sexual expression, so be it. They can obtain their own copy of "Shreds." I find it difficult to understand why the entire student body needs to read it in The Daily Campus.

The article on "Shreds II" in Thursday's Daily Campus states that the poetry magazine is "the most interesting and fresh literary event to come out of UConn's students in recent memory." Frankly, I find that difficult to swallow. As far as I'm concerned, every copy of "Shreds" I see will get appropriate treatment. I intend to Shred each and every page.

Jamie Lee Swift

It's more than a one-man race

Does the Daily Campus have any interest at all in the local race for State Representative? There are, contrary to what we read in the Daily Campus, two people running for this office. The only person we seem to hear about is Jonathan Pelto. Who is his opponent? His opponent is Ed Passmore, a former UConn student who wants to restore integrity in State Government. Has the Daily Campus told us anything about Mr. Passmore? No!

I would, as I'm sure any other registered voter in the area would, like to see more reporting about both sides of the campaign trail. I do not, and will not walk into the voting booth on November 4th with no idea of whom I am voting for besides names, parties, and district. One of the many jobs of the Daily Campus is to cover and inform the public on such matters of local news that affect the UConn student body.

Robert Chmielski, Jr.

Mr. Chmielski is a UConn student.

Soviet film is surrealistic portrayal of Stalinism, 50 years later

MOSCOW (AP)-The cinematic shocker of the season is an allegory of Stalin terror and its effect 50 years later. It is believed to be the first Soviet film about the dictator's brutality and was delayed by censors for two years.

"I've never seen anything like it in my life," a middle-aged Moscow woman said Wednesday. "You can't say it's a good film, it's just stunning."

A woman too young to remember Josef Stalin shuddered and said: "It's terrifying."

The movie is called "Pokayaniye" (Confession) and was made for television in Georgia, Stalin's native republic. It opened this month in Tbilisi, capital of the republic, and a Western visitor said it was the talk of the town.

It also has been shown to groups of intellectuals in Moscow, including the artists' society on Wednesday.

Neither Stalin nor his feared chief of secret police, Lavrenti Beria, is mentioned by name, but no Soviet audience could mistake the subject and final message that the country has yet to address Stalinism and its consequences.

Director Tengiz Abuladze uses costumes and surrealism in the 21/2-hour film to create an atmosphere that has the effect of setting the action apart from the Soviet Union of the 1930s and the 1980s. His purpose probably was to get around censors, who might have objected to a more direct approach.

Soviet creative arts have undergone some liberalization since Mikhail S. Gorbachev came to power in March 1985. The new leadership of the national film maker's union, elected at a congress last summer, has released several movies from the censor's shelf but nothing so stunning as "Confession."

It took 30 years for the film to be made.

Nikita S. Khrushchev denounced Stalin in 1956, three years after his death, and the dictator's name disappeared from public places. His body was removed from the Lenin Mausoleum on Red Square and buried at the Kremlin wall.

"Confession" opens in a Georgian kitchen. A middle-aged woman is baking cakes.

After she reads of the death of a party official named Varlan, who resembles Beria, the action switches to Varlan's burial and ensuing events.

His body is dug up three times and deposited in his family's garden. The grave robber is caught and turns out to be the woman who was baking cakes.

She defends herself at the trial by recalling her childhood under the rule of Varlan, a figure clad in black with a Hitler moustache and Beria's pince-nez and bulging neck.

Varlan befriends the girl's father, an artist who arouses suspicion when he demands an electric power station be removed from a church converted by the atheist government.

He is arrested and taken away. His wife and daughter join many other women anxiously awaiting news of vanished relatives, but an impersonal voice intones: "Transferred. No address."

A demented woman screams, "Just tell me he is dead! Tell me he is dead!"

The frantic heroine and her mother hear that names and addresses of prisoners are etched on logs at the railway station. They inspect the logs in vain.

Another woman, finding her relative's address, caresses it as she would a child. The girl plays with wood shavings as she watches a machine make pulp of the logs that have come to symbolize the prisoners.

A surreal court complete with blindfolded woman holding the scales of justice then is shown judging her father.

After other friends disappear, the girl's mother is seized. The flashback ends with the screams of the woman as they are separated.

Back in the present, the woman tells the court she will dig Varlan up again if she is freed, because "to bury him is to hide what he did."

Varlan's son, frightened by the disclosures, tries to have her committed to a mental hospital. The son's own son, symbolic of Soviet youth who know little of Stalin's terror, is horrified by what his grandfather did.

"Times were different then, it was a difficult time," his father says. "Your grandfather never killed anyone with his own hands."

The grandson commits suicide. His father exhumes Varlan's body and hurls it into a ravine.

At the end comes the revelation that all the action has been a fantasy of the cake baker and society still has not dealt with Stalinism.

Yale may get documents on Kent State shootings

NEW HAVEN (AP)-Yale University is more interested in securing documents related to the Kent State University shootings 16 years ago than in receiving some of the weapons used in the killings, a Yale spokesman said Thursday.

The comments came after a court ruling concerning the weapons in which a federal judge in Cleveland said he lacked the authority to make the weapons available for historical purposes.

Yale has been mentioned as a possible repository of some of the weapons.

"We'd just as soon, frankly, not have them," said Yale spokesman Walter Littell.

Littell said the university was interested in aquiring for its archives materials used in a civil suit stemming from the shootings by the Ohio Army National Guard. Four students were killed and nine wounded on May 4, 1970, when National Guardsmen opened fire during an anti-war demonstration at the northeastern Ohio campus.

"We wanted the papers" assembled by lawyers representing the victims' families, Littell said. He said he was not certain about whether the school had received any of the documents.

U.S. District Judge William K. Thomas said Wednesday that the U.S. military was the proper owner of the weapons, even though they had been issued to the Ohio National Guard.

The ruling rescinds an order the judge issued on April 17, 1985, allowing the guard to destroy all but a few of the 36 weapons if no other use could be found for them.

Thomas said the federal government indicated that the weapons would be stored at a federal depot in Pueblo, Colo., because, in the words of the government, they have "historical value and should be preserved."

Soul Man offends

LOS ANGELES (AP) - "Soul Man," a movie comedy about a white who poses as a black man to win a scholarship to Harvard Law School, is racist, the local NAACP chapter charged Thursday.

"We certainly believe it is possible to use humor to reveal the ridiculousness of racism," chapter president Willis Edwards said in a statement.

"However, the unhumorous and quite seriously made plot point of 'Soul Man' is that NO black student could be found in all of Los Angeles who was academically qualified for a scholarship geared to blacks," he said.

The New World release, which stars C. Thomas Howell, Arye Gross, Rae Dawn Chong and James Earl Jones, sold $4.4 million worth of tickets over the weekend in 1,282 theaters, ranking it third at the box office in its first weekend of release.

Howell plays a young man who uses tanning pills and curls his hair in order to pose as a black and get a minority scholarship after his wealthy parents refuse to pay his law school tuition.

Producer Steve Tisch, who also produced "Risky Business," defended the film."People don't like to be lectured to, but if they can be entertained maybe they'll go away with something," he said.

"Look at 'Tootsie,' " he said, referring to the Dustin

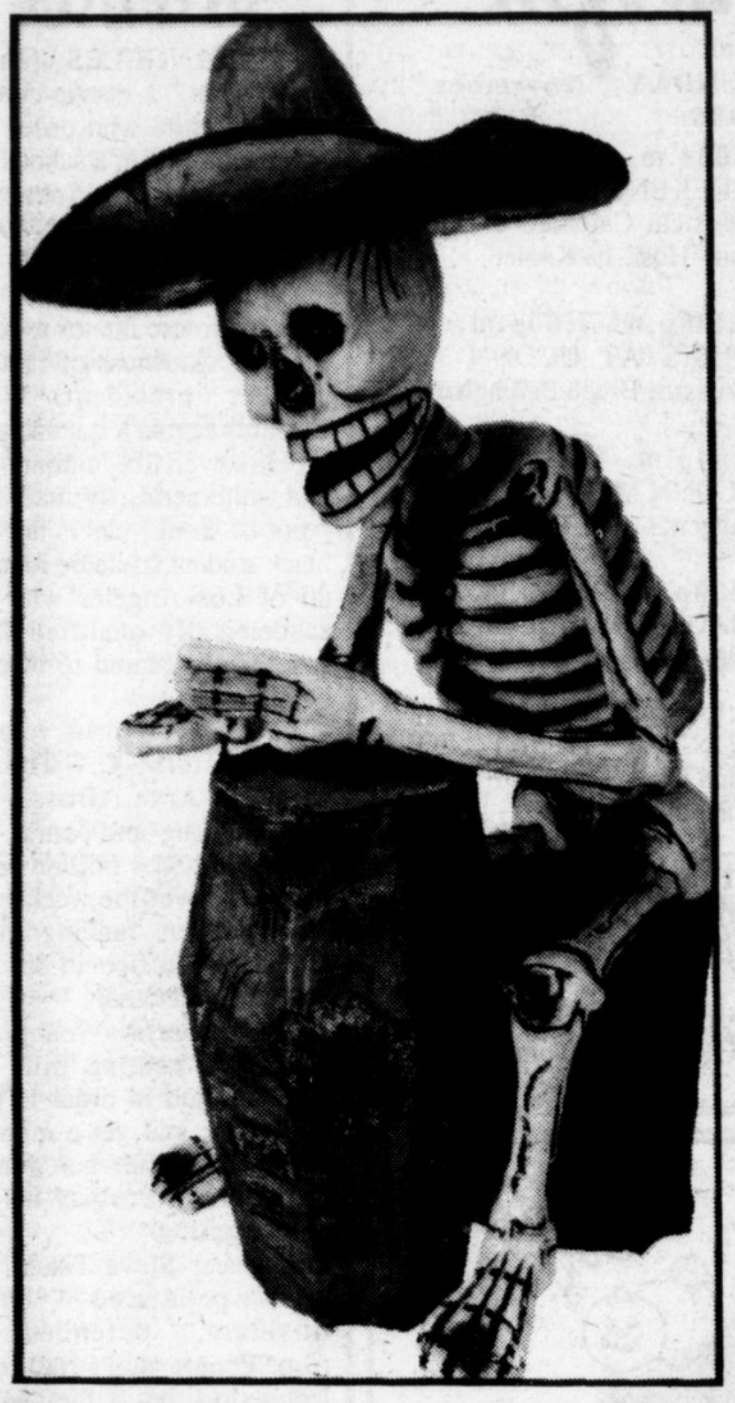
Wadsworth Atheneum celebrates 'Days of the Dead'



Skeleton drummer by Pedro Linares.

By Jennifer Berry
Daily Campus Staff

The Wadsworth Atheneum is celebrating the opening of a Mexican folk art exhibition, "Days of the Dead," today at 8:30 p.m. Although this exhibition, featuring skeletons and devils, opens on Halloween, it is far from ghoulish, and really has nothing to do with evil spirits.

"Days of the Dead" refers to All Saints Day and All Souls Day, a Mexican tradition where the souls of the departed return at the invitation of the living to share their homes and tables for a two day festival falling on November 1 and 2.

Elaborate altars are set up in homes and decorated with marigolds and cockscombs, with food and drink enjoyed by the person when they were alive, and with photos and favorite objects. Since the souls are invited to take part in all their favorite activities, skeleton images are set up depicting detailed scenes of everything from a marriage ceremony to a baseball game.

"There is absolutely nothing ghoulish about the Days of the Dead celebration," said Sal Scalora, co-curator of the exhibition. "It's not a Mexican Halloween. It's not about evil. Death isn't seen as an end, but as a continuation. The souls are welcomed back because they are simply relatives who have died."

The exhibition includes large paper-mache figures made by a contemporary Mexican master of the art, Pedro Linares, and other folk art items used to celebrate this festival in Mexico.

Linares, known in Mexico as "el maestro del carton" (the master of papier mache), makes nearly life-sized representations of the kinds of tiny figures that are sold in markets for use in decorating altars and graves for the Days of the Dead. An octogenarian whose work has been collected by many museums and individuals, Pedro Linares is an artist known throughout Mexico. His son and grandson help him in his roof-top studio above his modest house in Mexico City.

Andrea Miller-Keller, who is co-curator of the exhibition with Sal Scalora, said "this show challenges the distinction between fine art and craft. The work of Pedro Linares, clearly an inspired, self-taught sculptor, is juxtaposed with objects that you can buy on the street."

Scalora emphasized that "there is not a family in Mexico who doesn't take part in the festival. All the toys and figures can be made from inexpensive materials such as paper, matchboxes, and wood."

Most of the items in the exhibition were bought by Scalora from street vendors in Mexico, but what really makes them unique is the rich sense of family tradition and the strict attention to detail of each skeleton figure.

A Hartford resident, Carlos Hernandez Chavez, who is advising the Atheneum on this project, recalls the experiences he had in his own childhood in Mexico City. "As kids we would go out on the street with carved gourds, lighted by a candle inside, and collect coins. If gourds were not available in the city markets, we would use shoe boxes or tin cans."

"For days and nights in advance of the fiesta the markets outside the graveyards are full of life, selling little skulls and figures made of spun sugar, pan de muerto (literally, bread of the dead, a sweet egg bread shaped like human figures), paper doilies in bright colors, candles and flowers," said Chavez.

"Very often political leaders, actors and actresses and other popular figures would be lampooned in the press at this time, each personality shown as skeleton in some foolish act that he or she may have committed the previous year," he added.

Atheneum gives 'Night of the Angels' party

East Los Angeles Days of the Dead celebration.

The opening party for the "Days of the Dead" exhibition at the Wadsworth Atheneum will take place tonight beginning at 8:30 p.m. and lasting until midnight. Guests will be entertained with Mexican and other Latin American music, as well as disco dancing. The name of the party is "Night of the Angels," taken from the name of the first night of the festival which is dedicated to the angelitos, those who die without sin.

Three films will be shown during the opening party including: The Days of the Dead among the Tarascan Indians (1982, directed by Bob Freimark, 27 min.); Days of the Dead (1957, directed by Charles and Ray Eames, 14 min.); and Pedro Linares, Folk Artist (1975, directed by Judith Bronowski and Robert Grant, 22 min.). The films will also be shown on Saturday, November 1, the day of the opening of the exhibition to the public.

Carlos Hernandez Chavez, the consultant to the evening's festivities, will be performing that night with two other musicians, David Giardina, guitar, and Marty Elster, marimba. Also performing at "Night of Angels" will be Ricardo Moraga, a musician with the Pioneer Valley Folklore Society, originally from Santiago, Chile, whose four-person band will perform mariachi music and other Latin pieces.

"Night of Angels" is free for members of the Atheneum and costs $7.50 for nonmembers. Mexican snacks and drinks catered by Margaritaville will be served during the evening. Disco dancing will be going on in with Power Station DJ, Manny Pinho. Cash bars will be set up in the museum. Guests are urged to come in clothing with a south of the border flavor or costumes in the spirit of the evening, e.g. skeletons, angels, etc.

Mair-Davis Duo gives concert

The Mair-Davis Duo will perform at von der Mehden Nov. 10 at 8:15 p.m.

The Mair-Davis Duo, a guitar and mandolin team, will present a free concert at von der Mehden Recital Hall Nov. 10, at 8:15 p.m.

The pair will perform works from a new album, set for release during American Music Week, Nov. 3 to 9, as well as from two previous records. The duo will sign albums at a reception following the concert.

Based in Providence, R.I., classical guitarist Mark Davis and mandolin virtuoso Marilynn Mair have won praise throughout Europe and the United States. England's "Guitar International" magazine cheered the duo for presenting "a sparkling concert." Sweden's "Ostogota Correspondenten" said the pair showed "complete virtuosity." Their repertoire of more than 200 major works includes music of Vivaldi, Beethoven and Paganini; Latin American music; and works of contemporary composers.

device to expose sexual stereotyping. I think 'Soul Man' uses it to explode racial stereotyping."

The national office of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, which asked its Beverly Hills-Hollywood chapter to report on the film, will make a decision soon whether to call for a boycott, Edwards said.

In his statement, Edwards said that while the film "purported to be revelatory about racism through the use of humor, in actuality (it) reveals the racism and sexism of its creators."

The director of "Soul Man," Steve Miner, said the film makes the point that it was unfair for the Howell character to take a scholarship from a minority student.

"In fact, he suffers because of it. Things go wrong," he said. "He begins to get a glimmer of what it might be like to be black in America."

Celtics not at full strength to play Washington tonight

BOSTON (AP)-Three key Boston Celtics players figured to be sidelined for Friday night's game with Washington. And the season hasn't even started.

The game with the Bullets is the NBA season opener for both teams. Boston, with virtually the same cast that won the title last season, take on a Washington club that made major changes.

It added center Moses Malone and forward Terry Catledge, both in a trade with Philadelphia, and picked up forward Jay Vincent from Dallas.

Scott Wedman's heel injury, Danny Ainge's back problem and Bill Walton's sore ankle were expected to keep them out of the game and leave Celtics' Coach K.C. Jones with just 10 healthy players. Wedman was placed on the injured list Thursday, meaning he must miss at least five games.

But Jones is pleased with some developments this week in training camp.

"I wasn't happy with what we had been doing," he said. "We were saying we were going to get it back but there was more saying than doing. What we've got to do is work. Work on execution, the basics. I want to see it on the court."

"We got some of the anger, some of the aggression back" in this week's workouts, guard Dennis Johnson said. "Up until now it had been lax, at least for the last week."

With Ainge expected to miss at least three games after being kneed in the back in an exhibition game against Houston Oct. 17, Jerry Sichting should join Johnson in the starting backcourt.

Last year's starting frontcourt of Larry Bird, Kevin McHale and Robert Parish remains intact, although they may have to do extra duty with Walton, a backup center who hasn't practiced in training camp, and Wedman, the first forward off the bench, on the sidelines.

Their absence would leave Greg Kite, David Thirdkill and Fred Roberts as the frontline substitutes and Rick Carlisle and Sam Vincent as the backups at guard.

Boston brought just 13 players to training camp, the 12 on last year's team plus Roberts, who was obtained in an off-season deal with Utah.

"He's trying to do everything too fast," Jones said of Roberts. "He feels like an intruding stranger and what we're saying to him is, 'take it easy, Fred, we like you.'"

Malone is Washington's primary newcomer, replacing Jeff Ruland at center, and he figures to improve the Bullets' rebounding.

Philadelphia added Ruland, Cliff Robinson, Roy Hinson, Danny Vranes and Tim McCormick. New York has center Bill Cartwright back form an injury. New Jersey obtained forward Orlando Woolridge and guard Dwayne "Pearl" Washington. The death of first-round draft choice Len Bias left Boston unchanged except for Roberts.

"The other teams in the conference have done very well with trades and in the draft," Johnes said. "We sat back and watched everyone else do everything. We're the champs and everyone is shooting at us."

The Celtics, who won 67 regular-season games last season when they lost just one home game, say they won't become complacent after winning their 16th championship.

"We're not a flash in the pan," McHale siad. "We've won it before. We have the same attitude every year."

The last teams to win back-to-back titles were the 1967-68 and 1968-69 Celtics.

"The main concern with repeating seems to be with the media and everyone else," Jones said.

Tway advances

TUCSON, Ariz. (AP) Bob Tway advanced easily, but Tom Watson was upset Thursday in the first round of the Seiko Tucson Match Play Championship.

Tway, already assured of PGA Player of the Year honors, moved closer to the money-winning title with his 68-75 victory over Brett Upper in the final official event on the 10-month PGA Tour.

Watson, who disqualified himself for an inadvertent breach of the rules last week in San Antonio, Texas, was ousted by Edwards 66-72.

Tway now need only a win over Steve Pate in Friday's second round to clinch the money-winning title.

Tway, who won the PGA national championship and three other titles this season, needs $5,517 to surpass Greg Norman's leading $635,296. A second-round victory will assure Tway of a minimum $12,500. Norman is not competing in this event.

Bob Wade named new Maryland coach

BALTIMORE (AP)-Bob Wade, coach and athletic director at Baltimore's Dunbar High School, will be named basketball coach at the University of Maryland to replace Charles "Lefty" Driesell, The Associated Press learned Thursday.

Driesell, under pressure to give up his coaching post following the June 19 cocaine-induced death of basketball star Len Bias, resigned Wednesday to accept a job as assistant athletic director at the university.

A graduate of Morgan State University in Baltimore, Wade had posted a 280-19 record during 10 seasons at Dunbar, with the Poets being voted mythical national high school championships.

"It couldn't have happened to a better guy," said Lake Clifton High School Coach Woody Williams, a long-time friend of Wade's.

"I think it will be a job that for awhile will be kind of difficult...but knowing Bob and the type of person he is, the way he works and things he stands for, he can do a job that they'll be proud of and he'll be proud of."

Wade, 41, has had a running feud with Driesell over the years. Wade claimed the Maryland coach would not recruit in Baltimore, while Driesell complained that Wade directed his best players to Georgetown University.

Wade was drafted by the Baltimore Colts of the NFL, but was released. He later played for Pittsburgh, Washington and Denver.

Football set to challenge Terriers

Win important for conference playoff hopes

The final month of the football season begins Saturday and UConn knows it needs a win over Boston University to stay in the race for the Yankee Conference title.

The Huskies are 5-2 overall and 2-1 in the conference. UMass leads the conference at 4-1, while New Hampshire and Delaware are both 3-1. Richmond, Boston University and Maine all have three conference losses, while Rhode Island is 0-5.

The conference winner receives an automatic berth to the NCAA Division I-AA playoffs.

UConn coach Tom Jackson said the Huskies must concentrate on Beating BU (2-5, 2-3) and not worry about the final three games, at Delaware, against Rhode Island and at UMass.

"They're better than Maine," Jackson said. "They beat Maine [26-23] and we had all we could handle with Maine [a 35-19 victory last week.]"

The victory over Maine was a good one for UConn, Jackson said, because the Huskies had no turnovers and played well on offense, defense and special teams.

"I thought our kids did a really good job Saturday of picking each other up," Jackson said.

The offense picked up for the loss of tailback Jeff Gallaher, who had to leave the Maine game in the first quarter with a sprained ankle. Marc Mofsowitz gained 97 yards on 19 carries and scored a touchdown, and George Boothe scored one touchdown rushing and one on a 93-yard kickoff return.

Gallaher is scheduled to be examined by a doctor today, and his status is questionable for the game.

Jackson said UConn will be able to get by if Gallaher can't play.

"I expect George to get more carries than he did last Saturday [seven]," Jackson said, "but I don't expect him to split the time [with Mofsowitz] like Jeff and Marc do."

The Huskies have gaine 941 yards rushing throught seven game, already surpassing the 841 they gained in a nine-game season last year.

"Our running game is better than I've ever seen it," senior offensive tackle Pat Anglim said.

Gallaher was the big man last year as UConn beat the Terriers 24-3. Gallaher carried 22 times for 141 yards and scored a touchdown.

Quarterback Peter Lane also had a big game, completing 17 of 28 passes for 152 yards and scoring two touchdowns on the ground.

Boston University coach Steve Stetson said the Huskies were a strong team last year, but are even better this season.

"I believe they're better than what they've been," Stetson said. "We're going to have to play as well as we can play to beat them."

BU was playing as well as they could in the first half last week against UMass, Stetson said, as the Terriers built up a 17-0 lead in the second quarter.

UMass came back, however, and scored a touchdown on its last posession of the first half and its first of the second half, which really hurt BU, Stetson said. In the second half, the Minutemen had the ball for 22:31, compared to 7:29 for Boston.

When you give [UMass quarterback Dave] Palazzi the ball for that much time, you're in big trouble," Stetson said.

The Terriers will be in trouble against UConn because of the Huskies' size. "Physically they're huge," Stetson said. "We're not a big football team."

With its last four games against Yankee Conference opponents, UConn knows it must keep winning.

"We've got an opportunity to control our own destiny," Jackson said, "and you can't ask for more than that."

While the Yankee Conference title would give the Huskies a playoff berth, athletic director John Toner said UConn might get in if it finishes second.

"One at-large team [from the conference] is a great possibility this year," Toner said.

Women's soccer wins again

WEST HARTFORD--Sophomore Terri Koziell broke a scoreless deadlock when she connected for the long goal of the game 24:10 into the second half to give the No. 8 nationally ranked The University of Connecticut a 1-0 win over No. 15 Hartford Thursday afternoon.

The win extends the Huskies' winning streak to seven games, their longest victory string of the year, and lifts UConn to 14-4-1. Hartford falls to 11-6-1 with the loss. This was the first meeting ever between the two Division 1 intra-state squads.

The game was the regular season finale for Connecticut, which now awaits word on a possible berth to the 12-team NCAA Division 1 national tournament. The NCAA pairings will be announced late this Sunday evening.

If selected, the bid would mark the eighth consecutive year that the eight-year UConn varsity program would receive a bid to national post-season play.

After a scoreless first half, Koziell notched the game-winner twenty four minutes into the final half. Taking a centering pass from tri-captain Linda Jackson, Koziell beat two Hartford defenders before blasting an 18-yard shot past the dive of Lady Hawk goalie Maureen McShea.

The goal was Koziell's team-leading 13th of the year and her third game-winner of the season.

The Huskies outshot the Lady Hawks 13-3, allowing Hartford no shots on goal in the final period.

UConn junior goalkeeper Bonnie Mitchell recorded just one save, that in the first half, en route to registering the Huskies' ninth shutout win of the year. McShea picked up seven saves for Hartford.

Surgery on Bosox

BOSTON (AP)-Sucessful surgery has been performed on Boston Red Sox first baseman Bill Buckner, pitcher Jeff Sellers and first-base coach Walt Hriniak, the club said Thursday.

The team announced the operations after earlier reporting that right fielder Dwight Evans and pitcher Tom Seaver had small tears in knee cartilage removed.

The club said Buckner had two large chips in his left ankle and many spurs in his left foot removed, Sellers had a bone chip fragment removed from the top of his left foot and Hriniak had a spur and a loose chip removed from his right elbow.

The surgery was performed at the University of Massachusetts Medical Center in Worcester by Dr Arthur Pappas, the team physician, after Boston's 8-5 loss to the New York Mets in the seventh game of the Work Series Monday night.
